

Cursum Perficio

Enya

Watermark (With Translation)

Cursum PerficioCursum perficio. I am making an end to my course.

Verbum sapienti: A word to the wise:

quo plus habent, the more have eo plus cupiunt. the more they want.

Post nubila, Phoebus After the clouds, Phoebus (1)

Iternum Over and over again (2)

Phoebus was one of the names for the Sun god,

which may be more famous as Apollo (Greek).

It is notable that the Sun is a male.

The word 'iternum' does not exist;

it could either be a misspelling for 'eternum' (eternal),

which is unlikely since it is very rare that an adjective

be used as an adverb, or for 'iterum' (again and again)

which is in fact an adverb and makes a little more sense (!).

The meaning of 'cursum perficio' is actually best explained

Enya was inspired by these words she saw on Marilyn Monroe's last house, where they were taken to mean "my journey ends here".

It is a rather "free" translation, but it's probably a very good way to convey the meaning of Latin, which has a way of saying things that is very distant from modern-day English.

The fact that those words turned out to be prophetic only adds to the power of the song.

Song Discussions is protected by U.S. Patent 9401941. Other patents pending.

Lyrics provided by <http://www.1songlyrics.com/>